PREFACE

It is two and a half years since the first instalment of this Catalogue was published. Mr. Stevenson has meanwhile laid the University under a further obligation. On learning that the expenses were likely to exceed the original estimate, he spontaneously made a substantial addition to the fund he had created. The present volume is considerably larger than its predecessor, and carries the record on to the end of the coins of Asia Minor. I am hopeful that the third, which will conclude the Greek series, may appear after a not less reasonable interval. I must, however, regretfully admit that the pressure of other duties is rendering it increasingly difficult to find time for work that cannot in any sense be described as official.

The plates have been executed by Messrs. Annan of Glasgow. The delicate task of preparing the necessary casts was again undertaken by Professor Young. This is but one of many services he has rendered to the Catalogue. For his constant kindness to myself I cannot sufficiently thank him.

The plan of the book was explained in my former Preface. I indicated there how much I owe to the Historia Numorum and to the Coin Catalogues issued from the British Museum. The more important and helpful of the other works consulted are referred to in the footnotes. Conspicuous among these are the writings of Dr. Imhoof-Blumer, who has also given me the benefit of his advice on various points of difficulty. I should add that M. Babelon's excellent Inventaire sommaire of the Waddington Collection has often been of material service in the deciphering of obscure specimens.

Direct aid has once more been accorded me in most generous measure by the Keeper of Coins in the British Museum and his colleagues. In particular, Mr. Warwick Wroth and Mr. G. F. Hill were good enough to read the whole of the following pages in proof. Although the original coins were not before them, their wide and accurate knowledge of the subject enabled them to furnish much useful criticism.

I have particular pleasure in expressing my indebtedness to Dr. H. von Fritze, of Berlin, editor of that division of the Corpus Nummorum which will deal with Northern Asia Minor. Dr. von Fritze kindly read in proof those parts of my volume which bear most closely on his subject, and sent me his valuable notes. The portions of the book that have thus profited are pp. 215—304 and pp. 567—572.

Thanks are further due to the authorities of the coin cabinets in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris and in the Museums at Berlin, Gotha, Copenhagen, Vienna, Naples, and Athens for ready response to requests for casts of pieces under their care.

I take this opportunity of saying that a few inaccuracies have come to my notice as occurring in Volume I. Detailed mention of them is reserved for a brief supplement of additions and corrections which I propose to incorporate in Volume III. As I am anxious to make the supplement as complete as possible, I shall be grateful if those who have occasion to use either of the other volumes will communicate with me regarding any points where amendment appears to be required.

I have spoken of Mr. Stevenson's characteristic liberality to the Trust Fund. I desire to add a single word of personal acknowledgment. His continued friendly interest in the progress of the Catalogue has been an encouragement of no ordinary kind.

GEORGE MACDONALD.

CATALOGUE

SIGNS AND ABBREVIATIONS

In printing the inscriptions the following conventions have been observed :—

(1) Square brackets indicate that the place of the letters they enclose is off the coin. E.g. ΑΘΗΝΑΙ[ΩΝ]

(2) Short strokes on the level of the line indicate an uncertain number of illegible letters. E.g. Π Ε _ _ _

(3) Dots on the level of the line indicate a definite number of illegible letters, each letter being represented by one dot. E.g. ΤΑΡΑΝ . . . . Ν

(4) A dot placed beneath a letter indicates that, while the letter is certain, it is impossible to decide between two or more forms of it. E.g. ΑΛΕ̣ΞΑΝΔΡΟΣ

In references for illustrations 'B.M.C.' means in each case the appropriate volume of the British Museum Series of Coin Catalogues.

The following include specimens of two distinct series, an earlier and a later, each represented by two denominations, the smaller of which is evidently equivalent to one half of the larger. In the later series the weights have been doubled. The head of Apollo on No. 19 is not far removed in style from that on Nos. 20 ff.

CORCYRA

585—450 B.C.

The characteristic and as yet unexplained Corcyrean type of the cow and calf, found also at Apollonia and Dyrrhachium, was probably borrowed from the East. It appears, for instance, on coins sometimes attributed to Tarsus. Its occurrence at Carystus (q.v.) points to an early connection between Euboea and Corcyra.

* It has been suggested that the neglect of the Corinthian standard may illustrate the well-known antipathy of the Corcyreans to the mother-city. Probably, however, the main consideration was commercial convenience. The Aeginetic standard would keep Corcyra in touch with the mainland of N. Greece, while the slight reduction of the stater would make it nearly equivalent to four Corinthian drachms.

AETOLIA

Circa 279—168 B.C.

It was owing to the part that they took in expelling the Gauls from Greece (279 B.C.) that the Aetolians first became powerful. The Rev. type of No. 1 is a copy of the statue dedicated by them on that occasion at Delphi. It was on their invitation that Antiochus invaded Greece, and they met with no mercy from Rome afterwards (189 B.C.), though the issue of money may not have ceased till after Pydna.

			The purity and full weight of the Athenian coins gave them currency over a large part of the ancient world. Hence the persistency of the old types, and their archaistic treatment. † If one could be certain that No. 33 was struck at Athens, it would help to settle the question as to whether the city continued to strike tetradrachms all through the reigns of Philip II. and Alexander the Great. The features of Athena recall unmistakably the head of Herakles on the familiar pieces of Alexander. Unfortunately there is no evidence as to provenance, and the coin may be one of the 'barbarous imitations' issued in the East. The same strongly marked lower jaw appears in the tetradrachm from India figured in B.M.C., pl. vii. 6.

New Style

Silver*

The style of the 'new' silver coins points to the latter part of the Third Century B.C. Their issue may have begun when Athens formed an alliance with Rome, and shook off the yoke of Macedon. The head on the Obv. is copied from the statue of Athena Parthenos by Pheidias. The monograms, names, and symbols on the Rev. indicate magistrates. The letter on the amphora denotes the month during which the coin was struck,† while the letters beneath are mint-marks.

Circa 220—197 B.C.

			CORINTH
			Silver
			The early date at which Corinth began to strike money is a testimony to her commercial activity, and the persistency of the Pegasos type is a proof of the popularity of her issues. The stater was of Euboic-Attic weight, but the adoption of a system of division by three and by six facilitated exchange with cities where the Aeginetic standard was in use, the Corinthian drachm, or third, being nearly equivalent to the Aeginetic hemidrachm.

			Achaean League
			Circa 280—146 B.C.
			There are in existence federal Achaean coins the style of which is apparently earlier than the Macedonian Conquest. These, however, are rare. The struggle for supremacy in Macedon itself (see Vol. I., p. 339), and the deaths in rapid succession of Lysimachus, Seleucus I. and Ptolemy Keraunos, combined with the pressure of a Gaulish invasion, gave the Peloponnesian towns their opportunity. In 280 B.C. the Achaean League was reorganized, and gradually extended its power till it included the whole peninsula. It was dissolved by the Romans in 146 B.C. *In the following list there is added to the name of each town the probable date of its admission to the League.

CEPHALLENIA

Cephallenia, on which Cranii, Pales, and Same were all situated, lay in the direct trade route between Greece proper and the Western Mediterranean. Hence, probably, the early date at which coinage began there and in Zacynthus. The standard employed was the light form of the Aeginetic, which prevailed at Corcyra, and throughout North-Western Greece generally. (See pp. 16, 27.)

Messenia

MESSENE

Circa 280—146 B.C.

Messenia, being in complete subjection to Sparta, struck no money before the battle of Leuctra. After its liberation, in 369 B.C., silver coins of Aeginetic standard were issued, and subsequently, under Macedonian influence, a series of Attic weight. The following are of still later date, the style and standard of the silver pieces showing that they are contemporary with the money of the Achaean League.

LACEDAEMON

After circa 250 B.C.

During early times the 'tortoises' of Aegina furnished Sparta with a currency. Except the traditional iron money, of which no specimens have survived, no coins were struck by the state until after the Macedonian supremacy. Nos. 1—3 are earlier than 192 B.C., when Sparta joined the Achaean League. For silver issued after that date, see p. 134, No. 49. Many of the bronze pieces, on the other hand, are of very late style, and belong to the period of Roman dominion.

Argolis

ARGOS

Circa 468—322 B.C.

The first coins that can be certainly assigned to Argos date from the early part of the Fifth Century B.C. They were probably issued when the city, having recovered from the effects of her defeat by Sparta, consolidated her strength by reducing Mycenae and other neighbouring towns. Nos. 1 and 2 belong to this period. The Hunter Cabinet contains no specimens of the fine silver series struck after the end of the Fifth Century, when Argos became a great artistic centre.

Circa 322—229 B.C.

Under Macedonian influence, the heavier silver currency of Argolis probably consisted of tetradrachms with Alexander's types. The following, which represent the smaller denominations, were Attic tetrobols, except No. 11, which is an obol; but they would also pass as Aeginetic triobols. These issues came to an end in 229 B.C., when Argos joined the Achaean League. See p. 131, No. 17.

Arcadia

Circa 550—420 B.C.

Nothing is known of any political federation of the Arcadians in early times, but the existence of federal coins is a proof that the feeling of unity between the cities found expression in an organization of some sort. The place of mintage is uncertain; not improbably it was Heraea. This issue came to an end about the time of the battle of Mantineia.*

2	42·5	AR ·6	Female head, hair loose; three-quarter face towards l.	Head and neck of bull r.

[Plate xliii. 8.]

The types would indicate that No. 2 was struck either at Gortyna or at Phaestus, probably the latter. See Svoronos, Προσθῆκαι κ.τ.λ. in Ἐφ. Ἀρχ., 1889, p. 202.

3	117·4	AR ·8	Female head r., wearing earring of three drops, and wreath of ivy leaves; border of dots.	ϽΕΤΕΟ[_ _ (in field r.) Stag, with ornament at neck, trotting r. within linear square; all within circular border of peculiar pattern (Cretan labyrinth ?)

[Plate xliii. 9.]

This piece is obviously the 'prototype' of the drachm in the Library at Winterthur, described and figured by Dr. Svoronos in his Num. de la Crète anc. (p. 331, No. 2; Pl. xxxi. 13). Dr. Imhoof-Blumer, who first drew attention to the Cretan fabric of the Winterthur coin, has seen a cast of the Hunter specimen. He agrees with the above reading of the legend, but is unable to suggest any interpretation.

Bronze

4	20·	Æ ·45	Female head r., hair gathered in knot with hanging tresses.	⊞

The provenance of similar specimens makes it probable that No. 3 is Cretan. See Svoronos, Num. de la Crète anc., p. 326, and Προσθῆκαι κ.τ.λ. p. 211. The grounds on which it has been attributed to Thenae or Therapnae appear, however, to be inadequate.

Nos. 7 ff., whose style shows them to be very late (First Century B.C.), have been attributed by Svoronos (Num. de la Crète anc., pp. 125 f.) to Dreros in Crete. The fabric suggests that they are Cretan. But, on the other hand, there is no evidence as to provenance, and therefore no certainty that they belong to Crete at all. When M. Svoronos wrote, he was able to judge of No. 7 only by the representation in Combe's Descriptio (Tab. 68, i.), which fails to show any traces of a legend. The inscription, doubtful as it is, renders his attribution untenable.

ANDROS

Fourth Century B.C., and later

It is probable that Andros had an archaic silver coinage, like other important Aegean islands (see Melos, Nos. 1 ff.). But the earliest coins that can be assigned to it with certainty are pieces resembling No. 1, which probably began to be issued after 308 B.C., when Ptolemy took the Cyclades under his protection. Nos.* 4 and 5 are considerably later.

MITHRADATES EUPATOR

Circa 121—63 B.C.

During the reign of Mithradates the Kingdom of the Bosporus was absorbed in that of Pontus. The change in the Rev. type of the tetradrachms is accompanied by increased idealization of the portrait on the Obv. (Nos. 3 ff.). The dates show that these alterations were made when the king reached the height of his power.†

NICOMEDES IV.

Circa 95—74 B.C.

This king was the son of Nicomedes III. The first half of his reign was a troubled period, a large part of it being spent in exile. From 84 B.C. onwards he lived in peace as a vassal of the Romans, to whom he bequeathed his kingdom at his death.

CYZICUS

Electrum

The electrum coins of Cyzicus furnished a large proportion of the gold currency of the ancient world for a century and a half after 500 B.C. They circulated freely in Europe along with the Persian darics, until both were finally displaced by the issue of Macedonian gold (Vol. I., p. 287). *Their value in silver was probably determined by a tariff based on some conventional ratio.

			Colonial Coinage
			Alexandria with its harbour formed an important link in one line of communications between Rome and Asia Minor. It was made a 'colonia' by Augustus, and coined abundantly throughout imperial times. The commonest types, after that of the feeding horse, are those which refer to the cult of Apollo Smintheus. Nos. 7—18, without the heads of emperors, are of the time of Caracalla and later.

			TENEDOS
			Silver
			Circa 450—387 B.C.
			There are earlier coins of Tenedos struck on the Babylonic standard. About the time of the peace of Antalcidas there is a prolonged cessation of issues. The significance of the Janiform head is doubtful; it may represent Zeus and Hera. No. 2 *is specially interesting, as the manner of representation upon it shows that the double-axe was a cultus object, set up possibly in the temple of Tenes.

LESBOS

ELECTRUM

Phoenician Standard

Sixths

The abundant electrum coinage of Lesbos was probably struck chiefly at Mytilene. The issue was, for a time at least, regulated by a monetary convention with Phocaea. The billon coinage, which is in the main earlier, is not represented in the Hunter Cabinet.*

			METHYMNA
			Methymna was one of the two chief cities of Lesbos, and was the centre of the vine-growing district, a fact to which some of its coin-types bear witness. It struck silver from the beginning of the fifth century down to the Peace of Antalcidas, and again after the victories of Alexander. The head of Pallas, which appears on all the silver issues, may allude to its friendship with Athens.

* No. 16 has been tooled on both sides, the Obv. having suffered most. Both the head and the legend on the latter have been tampered with. I suspect that it was originally a coin of Caracalla (Cf. B.M.C. Troas, &c., p. 209, Nos. 212 f.). Mionnet mentions two similar pieces,—iii., p. 54, No. 150, and Suppl. vi., p. 68, No. 104,—both retouched. I think it probable that the latter, which is cited from Haym [Tesoro Britannico, i., p. 257], is identical with the Hunter specimen.

EPHESUS

Before circa 415 B.C.

During this period Ephesus was under the control of Athens, and coined money but sparely. The bee and the stag, which are the predominant types on her coins, are symbols of the worship of Artemis Ephesia.

			After the Sicilian disaster Ephesus cut herself adrift from Athens, and fell under the control first of Persia and afterwards of Sparta. After the battle of Cnidus it combined with other Asiatic cities to throw off the Spartan yoke. The following piece was struck then. Cf. Rhodes, No. 1. On the type of the obverse, see Vol. I., p. 132 ; the legend is an abbreviation of συνμαχικόν.

			ERYTHRAE
			Circa 387—301 B.C.
			Erythrae was one of the cities that issued electrum in the sixth century B.C. Silver was also struck there during the fifth century. The following, however, from their style and the standard they follow, must belong to the period between the Peace of Antalcidas and the battle of Ipsus. The popularity of Herakles and his symbols as coin-types is connected with his cult as Ipoktonos, which flourished at Erythrae owing to the immunity enjoyed by the Erythraean vines from the ravages of the Ips (Strabo, 613).

			TEOS
			Silver
			Aeginetic Standard
			Circa 544—494 B.C.
			Teos struck silver from a very early date. When Harpagos reduced Ionia, circa 544 B.C., many of the citizens migrated to Abdera, taking with them their characteristic coin-type (see Vol. I., p. 382). That the city was not shorn of all its prosperity is shown by the continued issue of money.
			Staters
1	183·1	.R ·8	Griffin, with curled wings and protruding tongue, seated r., raising its l. forepaw. beneath, ΛV; early style. [Plate lii. 21.]	Quadripartite incuse square, with rough surfaces.
2	177·7	.R ·95	in front, uncertain symbol; late style. [Plate lii. 22.]
			Circa 494—394 B.C.
			There was no cessation of monetary activity after the suppression of the Ionian revolt. The Aeginetic standard was still maintained at Teos.
			Triobol
3	41·1	.R ·65	T (behind) Similar type; in front, lotos-flower ornament. [Plate liii. 1.]	Similar, with maculated surfaces.

Circa 394—365 B.C.

In 439 B.C. Samos was reduced to subjection by Pericles. In the period that followed, the Attic standard was introduced. In 394 B.C. Samos was one of the states that formed a league against Sparta, and issued the federal currency with the Herakles type (see p. 327). At this time both the Samian and the Attic standards were abandoned in favour of the Rhodian.

ALABANDA

Circa 200 B.C.

Bronze

1	65·	Æ ·65	Pegasos* flying r.; border of dots.	ΑΛΑΒΑΝΔΕ[ΩΝ] Humped bull butting l.; border of dots.

[Plate LIII. 23.]

Circa 197—189 B.C.†

During these years Alabanda, like various other towns in Asia Minor, bore the name of Antiochia in honour of Antiochus III. On his defeat at Magnesia it doubtless resumed its ancient name, which is found on silver and bronze of rather later date than the following. For tetradrachms with types of Alexander attributed to Alabanda, see Vol. I., p. 310, Nos. 135 f.

			CNIDUS
			Circa 390—300 B.C.
			In archaic times Cnidus struck silver freely on the Aeginetic standard. Under the hegemony of Athens she minted much more sparingly, if at all; the Aeginetic drachms of late fifth century style were probably issued after her revolt in 412 B.C. About 400 B.C. she adopted the Rhodian standard. The victory of 390 B.C. gave a fresh impetus to her commerce.

			SATRAPS OF CARIA
			MAUSSOLUS
			377—353 B.C.
			When the Athenian Empire fell to pieces, Caria was incorporated by the Great King in the satrapy of Tissaphernes. On the death of Tissaphernes, Hecatomnus of Mylasa became satrap of Caria. His steadily growing power was markedly increased by the Peace of Antalcidas in 387 B.C., *when the Greek towns in Caria were definitely assigned to him. * These letters, which are unfortunately too small to be distinguishable on the Plate, would appear from their size and position to be an artist's signature. But is there any reason why an artist should attach his name to such a conventional type? Mr. Head, whom I have consulted, thinks not, and suggests that the coin may represent a transition between the class on which magistrates signed with initial letters only, and that on which they wrote their name at greater length in ordinary letters.

This blow, coupled with the organization of the Lycian League and the erection of Delos into a free port, told severely on her commerce. Tetradrachms ceased to be issued. The drachm became the chief coin, its types being changed slightly, and its weight more carefully maintained.*

			Rhodes was one of the very few Greek states that refused to join Mithradates. At the conclusion of the war the Romans rewarded her for her fidelity by special privileges, and it was probably then that the last issue of Rhodian silver took place. In the course of this period the city would appear to have lost the right of minting silver. The unusual size of the bronze pieces (No. 80) indicates that they were not money of account, but were intended to replace the silver drachms (Nos. 77 ff.), which they closely resembled in type.

			Rhodes was at first attached to the cause of Pompeius, but subsequently declared in favour of Caesar. She was heavily punished for adhering to his party after his death by Cassius Parmensis, who, in 42 B.C., carried off a portion of the Rhodian fleet and destroyed the rest by fire. Commercial depression, consequent on the loss of her influence at sea, led to a reduction in the currency under one or other of the early emperors. The inscription on No. 92 shows that the value of the large bronze pieces was doubled.

LYDIA

EARLY LYDIAN COINAGE

Sixth Century B.C.

The Lydians were the first people to coin money (about 700 B.C.). The metal originally used was electrum. At a later date, possibly in the reign of Croesus, a double currency of gold and silver was instituted.

LYCIA

Dynasts of Lycia

The Persians, after the campaign of Harpagos (545 B.C.), established dynasts in Lycia, and this system of government persisted for nearly two centuries. Most of our knowledge of these early Lycian dynasts is derived from their abundant coinage. In* 362 B.C. Lycia was annexed to the dominions of Maussolus of Caria.

Dr. Imhoof-Blumer first drew my attention to the Cilician character of this piece. The letter in the field r. of the Rev. may be part of the date CKΘ. If so, the piece probably belongs to Soli-Pompeiopolis. Similar coins reading OMONOIA CЄBACTΩN were struck there in the year 229 of the city (=163 A.D.); see Mion., iii., p. 613, No. 358. The same inscr. occurs at Tarsus; see B.M.C., p. 191, No. 164, and Mionnet, iii., pp. 627 f., Nos. 434, 437 f.

CAPPADOCIA

Kings of Cappadocia*

The founder of the Cappadocian dynasty was Ariarathes I., who (circa 332 B.C.) succeeded in driving out the satrap set up by Alexander, and in making Cappadocia independent. For drachm struck by him at Sinope, probably before Alexander's invasion, see p. 236. He was put to death by Perdiccas and Eumenes circa 322 B.C.

ARIARAMNES

Circa 280(?)–230(?) B.C.

This king was the grandson of Ariarathes I. The following specimens have a close resemblance to the unique coin with APIAPAMNOY, now in Berlin,† while the monogram they bear obviously represents the same name.

			ARIARATHES IV. (Eusebes)
			Circa 220—163 B.C.
			It was during the reign of Ariarathes IV. that Roman influence became paramount in Cappadocia. He sided with Antiochus in the struggle, and had to pay a heavy indemnity to the victors. Hence, perhaps, the large issue of coins in 188 B.C.* The dates on the coins of Ariarathes and his successors are regnal years.

			ARIARATHES IX. (Eusebes Philopator)
			Circa 99—87 B.C.
			Ariarathes VII. was dethroned and put to death by Mithradates, who set up in his stead his own son as Ariarathes IX., the Cappadocians vainly striving to obtain recognition for Ariarathes VIII., a brother of the deposed monarch. Ariarathes IX. was never really King of Cappadocia. Many of his coins are contemporaneous with those of his successor. The resemblance to his father Mithradates is remarkable.

Cities of Cappadocia

CAESAREA

Under the name of Mazaca, this city had been the capital of the Kings of Cappadocia. It afterwards became Eusebeia, and finally (circa 10 B.C.) Caesarea. On the death of Archelaus, the last king, in 17 A.D., Cappadocia was made a Roman province.*

Imperial Coinage

Under the Emperors the mint of Caesarea assumed great importance, the money issued there being intended to circulate as an imperial currency in the eastern part of the empire. The same was the case at Antioch. The standard in use for silver appears to have been the Phoenician. But the weights were not adjusted with much care. The dating varies between the regnal year and the year of the consulship of the reigning emperor.*
